

Tener Goodwin Veenema, PhD, MPH, MS, RN, FAAN, Associate Professor, Johns Hopkins School of Nursing, Center for Refugee and Disaster Response, Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health, President & Chief Executive Officer, Tener Consulting Group, LLC.

Tener Goodwin Veenema, RN, PhD, MPH, MS, FAAN, is an Associate Professor and Pediatric Emergency Nurse Practitioner at the Johns Hopkins School of Nursing and at the Center for Refugee and Disaster Response. Dr. Veenema is internationally recognized for her work in disaster nursing and public health emergency preparedness. She is the editor of Disaster Nursing and Emergency Preparedness for Chemical, Biological and Radiological Terrorism and Other Hazards, now in its third edition and the AJN Book of the Year Award/ leading textbook in the field. For over fifteen years, Dr. Veenema has served as Senior Consultant to the United States Government, including the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS), Administration for Children and Families (Office of Human Services Emergency Preparedness and Response), Department of Homeland Security, Federal Emergency Management Agency, and currently the Department of Veterans Affairs. Dr. Veenema is a senior scientist on the American Red Cross National Scientific Advisory Board and an elected Fellow in both the National Academies of Practice and the American Academy of Nursing. In 2013 Dr. Veenema was awarded the Florence Nightingale Medal of Honor from the International Red Crescent (Geneva, Switzerland), the highest international award a nurse can receive. Dr. Veenema is committed to improving the health & safety of children following global disaster events and complex human emergencies.